

WE WRITE IT DOWN SO YOU DONT HAVE TO REMEMBER IT

Skrat’s Three Stars of the Week

Because sometimes the spotlight lands on the least likely limb

First Star: Thorin Normalshield -
Brewtality Squad - Statline: 1 confirmed kill, 0 apologies, 100% beard swagger

Thorin earns top honors this week for sending Count Varn Bloodgullet—the league’s most feared vampire runner—straight to the afterlife (or at least the nearest crypt). The hit was clean, the crowd went feral, and Brewtality’s locker room reportedly erupted into a spontaneous beard-plaiting ceremony. Skrat’s take: if you’re going to kill a vampire, do it with style. Thorin did.

Second Star: The Goblin Line - Da Krumpin’ Krew - Statline: 2 touchdowns, 0 dignity, 1 gopher punt (unconfirmed)

No one expected the goblin line to shine—least of all Skrat, who once described them as “sentient speed bumps.” But against the Hagpies, they were electric. Dodging gophers, slipping through Norse defenses, and scoring twice like they’d been possessed by the ghost of strategy. Whether it was luck, divine intervention, or just a lot of fermented mushroom juice, they earned this star as a unit.

Third Star: Peggy - The Mazehorns - Statline: 2 touchdowns, 1 leg, infinite heart

Peggy is living proof that you don’t need symmetry to be a legend. With just one leg and a whole lot of grit, she’s scored both of the Mazehorns’ touchdowns this season—dragging defenders, dodging curses, and stiff-arming fate itself. Skrat’s sources say she trains by headbutting boulders and eating raw onions. Whether true or not, she’s the soul of the Mazehorns, and this week, she’s Skrat’s sentimental pick. Don’t tell anyone. He has a reputation to maintain.

Blood, Gophers, and One-Legged Glory: A Midseason Review

Well, well, well—if you thought this season would follow logic, strategy, or basic field hygiene, you clearly haven’t been paying attention. Our mid-season check in delivers carnage, curses, and culinary confusion as the Brewtality Squad turned a vampire into soup, Da Krumpin’ Krew krumped the Hagpies into relegation (with help from a gopher uprising), and Peggy of the Mazehorns continued her one-legged rampage toward league legend status. Somewhere in the chaos, the Suck Squad still didn’t score, but they did manage to look mildly threatening, which is progress.

The standings are shifting like a troll on a trampoline, and Skrat’s ink is running low from all the injury reports. The Mazehorns remain undefeated, Da Hoodoo Hulks are brewing something foul and effective, and the Hagpies are flying south for the winter—permanently. With playoff hopes hanging by a thread and reputations being built on broken bones, this league is shaping up to be less a sport and more a beautifully orchestrated disaster. Let’s dive in.

RANKINGS NO ONE ASKED FOR

Tier I - The Juggernauts

The Mazehorns (2-0-0)

They’ve cracked skulls, drained blood, and somehow managed to win without actually scoring much. Two touchdowns in two games? That’s not offense—it’s a polite suggestion. But they’ve bullied both Dwarves and Vampires into submission, and lead the league in injuries caused. If they ever figure out how to cross the goal line without tripping over their own egos, the rest of the league should start writing their wills.

Da Hoodoo Hulks (1-0-1)

Undefeated, unhinged, and entirely unpredictable. Their 3-2 win over Da Krumpin’ Krew was less a match and more a magical riot. Nobody knows what fuels this team—dark rituals, fermented swamp juice, or just raw spite—but until someone figures out how to bottle their chaos, they’re a threat to every bone on the pitch.

Tier II - The Mid-Mashers

Brewtality Squad (1-1-1)

Balanced record, unbalanced roster. Rumors swirl about their runner situation—do they have one? Did he get eaten? Is he just very shy? With one game left, they’re teetering on the edge of glory or disaster. Skrat’s advice: invest in speed, or invest in excuses.

Da Krumpin’ Krew (1-1-0)

They stomped the Hagpies so hard the birds forgot how to fly. But the road ahead is paved with pain: Mazehorns and Brewtality await, and neither team is known for mercy. Still, the Krew’s got grit, guts, and just enough goblin grease to pull off a playoff push—if they don’t get krumped themselves.

Tier III- The Hopeless (But Hilarious)

The Suck Squad (0-2-0)

No wins. No touchdowns. No hope? Not quite. Their defense is tighter than a troll’s coin purse, and if they can just figure out how to move the ball forward instead of sideways, they might sneak into the postseason like a rat in a pie shop. Spiciest take of the week: they’re still alive, and that’s terrifying.

The Hagpies (0-2-1)

Mathematically eliminated. Spiritually broken. They had the tools, the talent, and the tactical acumen—and still got sent packing. Blame bad luck, blame bad coaching, blame Skrat’s curse (he did bet against them every week). Whatever the reason, they’re headed for relegation, and the only thing they’ll be scoring now is sympathy.